

WORKBOOK – SECTION FIVE

PEEK, SPLIT-ATTENTION, AND ENTRY DESIGN

Use this section to design how attention enters room and what might quietly steal it.

OPENING ENTRY

22. What PEEK type will you use first: curiosity, challenge, connection, humor, visual shock, or something else?

Our team will be starting with the first PEEK type as Connection

23. Describe the specific opening. What does the learner see, feel, hear, or do in the first 5 minutes?

Duffbeer.com - popup "Are you over the age of 21 "<yes/no>

Main Page with image

24. What emotional or cognitive state are you trying to create?

We are trying to make happy memories and good times that may not always be memorable.

SPLIT-ATTENTION AUDIT

25. List the biggest split-attention risks in your environment: screens, tabs, clutter, stress, tone, unclear direction, hunger, embarrassment, or something else.

The biggest split-attention risks in our environments would be embarrassment and unclear directions.

26. What can you remove, soften, simplify, or sequence differently to reduce those leaks?

To only take use of our product when at home or trusted places.

SCREENS AND RE-ENTRY

27. Where is screen use truly useful here, and where might low-tech or no-tech create better presence?

Tech can make this company better because our site gives full access to anyone ABOVE the age of 21 and offer a delivery service.

28. How will you re-open attention at the midpoint when energy naturally drops?

During the midpoint when energy naturally drops we would ask questions to the user/ fan on how their experience with the site has been.

29. How will you open the final, hardest section so the learner leans in instead of bracing away?

In the end/final section we will start to offer deals for certain packs and show them our points system where they can now make an account with DuffBeer.
